nerve distribution in the gluteal region in a population of Chinese people. To evaluate the distribution of the femoral nerve in the deep surface of the buttock in a Chinese population. The study comprised 135 dissections of the buttock and hip in a collection of 300 human cadavers, whose ages ranged between 10 and 90 years. The subjects were divided into five groups (each group containing 15 individuals): group I, age range from 5 to 10 years; group II, age range from 40 to 50 years; group III, age range from 60 to 70 years; group IV, age range from 80 to 90 years; and group V, age range from 20 to 30 years.

Twenty-five femoral nerves were dissected in each specimen. The distance from the femoral nerve to each of the first, second and third trochanters was measured, and then the overall femoral nerve distribution was determined. The femoral nerve was found to be in the upper region of the gluteal skin in all subjects. It was classified as Group I in three out of the 25 samples, Group II in 13 out of 25 samples, Group III in five out of 25 samples and Group IV in four out of 25 samples. It was classified as Group V in only one out of 25 samples. The femoral nerve was found on the medial side of the buttock and was in the lower region of the gluteal skin, just beneath the rectus femoris muscle (the group IV subject).

The average distance from the femoral nerve to the gluteal skin was 9.9 mm (range 4-19 mm).
