The 28-year-old Swede says he has turned to team boss Monisha Kaltenborn for emergency funding to head off a funding crunch. He says he has only enough money left from the third of his Sauber salary to pay his rent and put on the food and fuel that has helped him cope with life in monotonous Hungary. "This situation is serious, because now we don't know what's going to happen at Sauber," Ericsson told Autosport. "We don't know if I will continue to drive for Sauber, or if there will be a possibility to have me drive in 2020, or if I'm going to be on the phone for the last time in my life talking to Monisha to get some money. "Maybe the best way to get on with this is to make a desperate attempt to get this money. I'm not sure that's the best way to do it, but this is a desperate situation." Ericsson has been in Hungary since the summer break, working on getting his Sauber ready for the first of its pre-season testing on Tuesday. If Sauber does not ask for Ericsson's services, he will not race again in Formula 1. "I would love to drive for Sauber for two years and all the rest of the races," he said. "This is the best way to do it. "Now I'm waiting for Monisha to confirm that I will be on the phone again in the next 24 hours. I hope there's still a seat available for me for 2020, because I would like to have that possibility." Kaltenborn, who has been Sauber's boss for one year, is prepared to stand firm and say she wants to keep Ericsson. "It's not like I want to kick Marcus out of the team," Kaltenborn said. "But

The suit, which the label will fight, was filed under the fair use doctrine (which for copyright has become one of the most controversial issues), and under the innocent use defence, but even the most rudimentary understanding of the concept will prevent the dispute from going against Universal. In the past it has been well understood that the fair use doctrine is meant to protect uses of creative content that are considered to be fair. The fair
