Visit the official EC-Council course page for information on all of the courses as well as the application requirements for each certification.

The EC-Council certification programs are not accredited or linked to educational institutions.

Why is my institution offering EC-Council certifications? EC-Council certifications are offered by and through a variety of institutions, because the offering of certifications is part of the solution to the shortage of skilled information security professionals. EC-Council certifications provide individuals with the necessary skills to demonstrate their own competency and confidence in their professional security career. What is the relationship between EC-Council certifications and higher education? In most cases, the relationship between EC-Council certifications and higher education is one of complementarity. This means that the higher education institution provides the necessary environment and resources for the certification program to thrive, such as faculty, resources, and laboratories. The certification program then provides a body of knowledge that the individual can demonstrate while enrolled in a higher education program. A typical partnership between higher education institutions and EC-Council certifications follows a three-way relationship. EC-Council certifications do not provide either institutional accreditation or credit towards an institution's degree. How long does it take to get certified? All EC-Council certifications include the duration of the certification as a part of the overall certification process. Therefore, it is important to know the length of time it takes to obtain EC-Council certifications. Below is a comparison of the certification process and the duration that each certification takes to complete.

Certification Duration: . . . EC-Council certifications are done on a self-paced basis. This means that the certification program allows the individual to complete the certification on their own time and schedule. This is in contrast to a traditional academic program, which requires the individual to be a part of the higher education institution's course schedule.

Therefore, all certifications are scheduled around the individual's schedule and educational career. . What is the EC-Council certification process? EC-Council certifications are a way to identify and recognize the skills and knowledge an individual is knowledgeable in. All of the EC-Council certifications are vendor neutral and vendor agnostic. This means that an individual does not need to have a specific vendor in mind when they obtain EC-Council certification. There are three different certifications. They are: . . .
