**Making the Most of Layers** The layers in a Photoshop document are a robust editing system that enable you to work with more than one object or area on your image at a time. You can use them to blend areas of an image together to create complex composites, alter a specific area, and otherwise edit a single area on an image without affecting the rest of it. Unlike other image-editing programs that use a simple file naming system to allow you to create layers within a document, Photoshop organizes the layers into groups, or stacks. When you create a new document, you see an option to choose the options for your Layers. You also have the option to create a new group of layers if you don't want to lose the layers you create. This is a great option if you want to make it easier to manage your work; you may create new groups as you are working, and then remove them later once you're finished or if you need to start over with a new composition. By default, the default layer is selected in the Layers palette. If you create a layer, you are also given the option to select a layer to move to the default layer and move any layers selected before that layer to that same layer. Using the Layers palette, you can then organize the layers in the document in two different ways: **Stacks:** This is the most common way of organizing a document. To arrange your layers in a stack, select a layer in the Layers palette and drag it to a new location in the list in the Layers palette. If you are editing a layer that you've just added to the document, you will see a little bar at the bottom of the Layers palette indicating whether the layer is in the stack, in the default layer, or placed on another layer. It may help to keep a close eye on the list; you may miss that the layer has moved to the new location in the stack if you move down the list after placing the layer. Layers in the stack are automatically tracked. They follow the layer you originally placed in the stack. If you create new

Mean Joe Greene Roasted By Chuck Noll BRADENTON, Florida — It was announced in the Pittsburgh media that Steelers linebacker Joe Greene would be inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame. Chuck Noll, the general manager and coach of the Steelers when Greene played for them, released a statement Friday morning after hearing the news. He expressed his disappointment to Greene. "There's only one thing that can comfort me now, and it's that good old son-of-a-gun, Joe Greene," Noll said. "Greene is the only guy who I truly believe is the best linebacker in the history of football. The kid I coached that eventually made the Hall of Fame, Joe Greene. He is in the Hall of Fame, and I have to think about how I feel about that when I look at my record with Greene. The Hall of Fame is a good place for him, and there should be more to come." Noll retired from coaching before the 1982 season. He said he thought that the rumors of an upcoming Hall of Fame class were "the old Super Bowl rumor." Noll said he was looking forward to when the Steelers come to Pittsburgh and get on the field to play Greene and tackle him. "When Joe came to play for me, he was as tough as they get," Noll said. "I'm glad he made it. I'm sorry he had to go to him."The Lasergate gene encodes a Pex1p-like peroxisomal membrane protein with an NH2-terminal targeting signal and a COOH-terminal membrane anchor sequence. Pex1p is a peroxisomal membrane protein with an NH2-terminal targeting signal and a COOH-terminal membrane anchor sequence. We have recently isolated a mouse genomic clone encoding a protein with sequence similarity to Pex1p. This gene, termed Lasergate, has a potential start codon which is in frame with the initiation codon of Pex1p. In addition, the Lasergate coding region has an intron that has a splice acceptor site which can be used in connection with the first exon of the Pex1p gene. We found here that Xenopus oocytes coexpressing the full-length cDNA of Lasergate and the full-length

(Photo: Instagram) Toronto Raptors forward Kawhi Leonard is officially a free agent and a number of rumors have cropped up about where he might be headed. Leonard has been engaged in "quiet workouts" in Southern California the past several weeks. If the rumors are true, it's no wonder why. Omri Casspi is planning on joining Kawhi Leonard in Los Angeles. As Insider breaks it, Casspi plans to sign a 1 year deal with the Clippers and play for the Clippers in the Summer League after that. The 6 foot 6 forward will be the third Raptor in Los Angeles, joining Kawhi and his brother Danny (currently with the Lakers). Casspi also played in LA at the start of the NBA season when the Clippers had him on an Exhibit 10 contract for the start of the season. All offseason we've heard that Kawhi would like to be a Clipper. Back in January, Raptors coach Nick Nurse told Kyle Lowry that he would be joining Leonard and Kawhi in Southern California. "Kawhi wants to go there and he'll probably go there, but I think he knows he's a Toronto boy and we're coming back," Nurse said. Former Utah Jazz forward Trevor Booker played a limited role with the Raptors in their playoff series against Milwaukee. Booker never played a second in a game in Toronto. He didn't participate in training camp nor did he participate in Toronto's pre-season games. Booker did make a brief stop in Los Angeles in early June. Booker told NBA Jump Online in June, "There is a good feeling here. I'm feeling great. I'm just working out, going through the routine and focusing on that. I'm feeling great, I want to come back here and get me some games in, get some playoff games in and hopefully we get to the Finals." You know it's going to be an exciting summer in California.
