Required fields are marked *WhatsApp is adjusting its rules of the game to get more users. Recently, the company has announced that it is introducing a feature called Group Mute which will help users to make their chats more comfortable. Along with the feature, WhatsApp has added a reporting button to let users report abusive content in chats. The latest updates on WhatsApp's Groups & Mute will surely turn a favorable impression for the company's push into group chats. The company has introduced the feature in its Android app and Facebook Messenger. "There will be a 'report' button in group chat. The button will work both ways - in addition to reporting abusive messages, users can report spam, groups that are being malicious, and even to report offensive group names." In simple words, WhatsApp now lets its users who use the group to report abusive content in their chats. Let's see what else is new in the latest WhatsApp update. WhatsApp is also providing a report button for group chats. All the abusive content reported to the company will be sent to the authorities, in case, the messaging app users want. The report button is integrated with the report button in individual chats. Not only it lets users report abuse within group chats, but the platform has also added a feature called "Group Mute" which users can use to block any member of the group. The "Group Mute" feature allows users to avoid unwanted member in a group chat. This feature has been introduced as Facebook Messenger and Twitter's group-based messaging is not permitted. The feature works by limiting the number of messages that a user can send to a group. Any messages or media sent to the group will be displayed as "You are not allowed to send messages to this group". WhatsApp Mute will save you from annoying messages that are sent to a group. Before the official introduction of this feature, users complained that abusive members of a group chat made the chats worse. While there are several apps that let users manage group chats better, these features are absent in Facebook-owned messaging platform.
